exceptionally well and it can be easily translated into interior design in a way that truly brings it to life."

Each of the three bedrooms is themed: the master suite is dedicated to Burberry and features the brand's iconic ivory, beige and grey; the Paul Smith bedroom features a colourful striped headboard; and the Alexander McQueen room displays the fashion house's exquisite hand-painted silk scarves and sports a lace-motif wallpaper.

Elsewhere there are generic tailoring references, including houndstooth cushions, overstitching detail on the rich brown chairs, studding on leather ottomans and even a charcoal-grey fabric wallcovering called Savile Suiting (by Phillip Jeffries).

There is also a nod to gentlemen's fashion at British Land's super-prime Clarges Mayfair development, London W1, where the architect, Squire & Partners, took inspiration from a 17th-century "piccadill" ruff collar for the metalwork design on the balconies.

The lead interior designer for the development, Martin Kemp, the creative director of Martin Kemp Design, says: "The interior detail at Clarges Mayfair draws on the heritage of the area and pays homage to the traditional skills and beautiful craftsmanship of tailoring, watchmaking and expert manufacturing." This includes a hand-woven carpet that "emulates a pattern as if a tailor has dropped a delicate spool of ribbon on the floor".

It is not only large-scale developers that have cottoned on to the tailoring trend. Alex Isaac, the head of design at the interior design practice Morpheus London, says: "We recently designed a beautiful penthouse apartment in St John's Wood, in north London, on behalf of a private client and took inspiration from the world of fashion to create a number of bespoke pieces. These included a studded leather headboard, inspired by a number of designers, including Balenciaga, famed for its beautiful studded handbags. This was extended to pieces of furniture throughout the property, including a bespoke chair in the living room with a studded trim."

Less subtle perhaps is the eclectic furniture-maker Shaun Brownell, the director of Rhubarb London, who employs a team of tailors and seamstresses to help him to combine antique chairs with uniforms and suits. The exquisitely tailored chairs, which cost from £2,500 to £6,500, are based on a variety of uniforms, including those worn by the Coldstream Guards, Buckingham Palace staff and members of the Royal Air Force, as well as more conventional menswear.

Brownell's "Dapper Tweed" armchair, for instance, is a 1900s mahogany chair upholstered in a pair of vintage Dunn & Co Harris Tweed houndstooth country jackets. Brownell says: "A client brought in her late father's uniform and asked me to incorporate it into a chair — it is a piece of furniture with real memories. The effect I try to achieve is a piece with the poise of a seated retired gentlemen, slightly portly, the buttons just so."
